MURDER.

Shift Boss Nichols Brained by Pat Crowley, a Miner.

On Sunday night, in the lower levels of the Savage mine at Virginia City, a deliberate murder was committed, of which the following is an account:

It appears that while under the influence of liquor, Pat Crowley, an employe, went down to the 1200-foot level. Nichols told him he was too drunk to work, and advised him to go to the surface.

Crowley then picked up an ax and split Nichols' head open and threw his lifeless body down the shaft.

The murderer then made for two other men on the shift, who hastily boarded a cage and gave the signal to hoist. Crowley changed the signal to lower, but the two men rung themselves up again and cut the bell rope, thus reaching the surface.

Crowley is a large and powerful man; nearly six feet and a half, and would undoubtedly have murdered the other two had he been able to reach them. He is color bearer in the Emmet Guard, and his victim is a member of the band.

Crowley gave himself up on the appearance of an officer in the shaft.

There was great excitement in Virginia yesterday, and it is said lynching was talked of. The murderer is an Irishman and the murdered man Cornish.

Last night's Chronicle gives the following additional facts which vary a little from the above statement:

James Shaughnessy and James Hoban were the only witnesses of the crime, and state that Crowley and Nichols had some words about some work before the blow was struck. Shaughnessy says after Crowley rang to stop he was choked by Crowley who threatened to hurt him if he again rang to hoist. After some persuasion Crowley agreed to ring the cage up to the 1000 level, where the three men remained fully half an hour, Crowley still having the ax along with which he killed Nichols. Hoban tried to persuade Crowley to ring the cage up to the 600 level on the pretense that he was choking with thirst.

Suddenly an idea seemed to strike Crowley and he boarded the cage and rang it down to the 1200 level. As soon as it began descending Shaughnessy and Hoban seized their lanterns and began scrambling up the ladders to the 800 level, which they reached after more than once narrowly escaping falling down the shaft.

Shaughnessy after ringing the cage up to the 800 level, took a turn round a bolt with the bell rope to prevent Crowley from giving the signal to stop, and when the cage reached them they got aboard and rang to the top, greatly relieved at not finding Crowley on the cage, whom they feared would return and kill them.

Nichols was a native of Cornwall about 45 years old, and leaves a wife and five children. He was a member of the Chosen Friends, from which order his family will receive $3000. He was also a Knight of Pythias, an Odd Fellow, a member of the Miners' Union and Cara's cornet band.

A SQUARE MAN.—E. Robinson, the hotel man at Glenbrook, is a good man for fishermen to know, and parties going from this point to the Lake will do well to interview him. His knowledge of the fishing ground is unlimited, and as a courteous gentleman his superior is hard to find. His boats are not built with porous plaster bottoms, and a certain feeling of security is noticeable while in them. Mr. Robinson runs a first-class hotel, and the culinary department is up to the standard of excellence that pervades his very hospitable mansion. Nobody forgets Robinson after meeting him once.

Heartless Anglers.

Since it has been discovered that the creek coming down the canyon alongside the Lake road contains a few half-grown trout, the entire stream is lined with men and boys who would pounce on a three inch trout and yank it back to town with the statement the next day that "the smallest fish I caught weighed at least a pound."

Last Sunday as the writer was passing through this section a number of fishermen were noticed who kept all the fish caught regardless of size, when the small ones should have been thrown back.

The number of trout streams near Carson are limited and such conduct as the above is the cause of the scarcity. There is a prospect of this stream becoming a good one for anglers, but they must consider the fact that fish need a year or two in order to pass the state of infancy.

We hope in the future to see fishermen conscientious enough to take only the larger fish and toss the small ones back into the stream.

Sad News.

Rollie Tilden, well-known among the young men of Carson, was struck on the head by the timbers of a bridge while braking on a freight train in San Jose and was killed. The local paper of that place says:

"R. M. Tilden was a young man of much promise and was greatly esteemed by his employers who will find it difficult to get another man to fill his place. He possessed a cheerful, confident disposition, and was loved and respected by all who knew him."
